Chapter 1 by R

I was sick of the university, my family, the weather, the monotony, just everything really. So when I saw the flyer pinned to the bulletin board in my Signing for the Medical Interpreter 402 classroom that read, "Intern as an interpreter on a tropical island for oppressed migrants!" I signed the forms, asked no questions, and a month later found myself in a parallel universe, enjoying a temperature that never dipped below 60 degrees Fahrenheit, working as a translator for a non-profit fighting for úDal rights.

My mother later asked me why I wasn't afraid of the úDals turning me into one of them- they were close relatives of Vampires after all. I told her it was because I'd never met a mean deaf person. She told me úDals weren't people, nor were all deaf beings nice, and my street smarts were nonexistent.
